Transient receptor potential vanilloid 1 modulates the pain response induced by activated natural killer cells in a mouse model of adjuvant-induced arthritis. Adjuvant-induced arthritis (AIA) is a widely used animal model for rheumatoid arthritis (RA). The activation of natural killer (NK) cells contributes to the pathogenesis of AIA, and the activation of NK cells is associated with pain in patients with RA. We tested the hypothesis that the transient receptor potential vanilloid 1 (TRPV1) modulates the pain response induced by activated NK cells in a mouse model of AIA. Bacterial peptidoglycan (PGN) was used to induce arthritis in Balb/c mice by intra-articular injection. The mice received NK cells or saline and were assessed for pain behavior. The results showed that the pain behavior was significantly decreased in mice treated with the TRPV1 antagonist, SB-705498, compared with the control group, following the injection of PGN. In addition, the TRPV1 expression was significantly increased in the DRG and the spinal cord in the AIA mouse model. Furthermore, the TRPV1 expression was increased in the DRG and the spinal cord in the mouse model of AIA and this enhancement was abrogated by the injection of SB-705498. These findings suggest that NK cell-induced pain is mediated, in part, by the TRPV1-signaling pathway in the spinal cord.

Silicon Valley-based cloud storage firm Dropbox has added a number of new features to its desktop and mobile apps, such as the ability to save content to multiple folders, simplified sharing options, and even integration with the iPad. In addition to these new features, Dropbox is also rolling out an upgrade to its iOS app, which improves the app's overall performance by reducing the amount of time to load in the app. The update is also optimized for the iPhone 4 and iPhone 3GS. This is the latest Dropbox app update since the one for iPad. Mobile Features "Previously mobile users had to download a new app or update an existing version of the Dropbox mobile app, but with this version we now use the same codebase for both iOS and Android, making it easier for us to get updates out to more users," Dropbox co-founder and CEO f678ea9f9e
